

LEGACY OF A SOUTHERN LADY:
ANNA CALHOUN CLEMSON, 1817-1875
ORDER FORM

Legacy of a Southern Lady: Anna Calhoun Clemson, 1817-1875, by Anne Ratliff Russell (Clemson, SC: Clemson University Digital Press, 2007), pp. xx + 162. $19.95 paper.

As Clemson Historian Jerome V. Reel states, “The interest in Southern women’s history has never been higher nor more exciting. And one of the most important nineteenth-century South Carolinians is Anna Maria Calhoun, daughter and frequent confidante of John Caldwell Calhoun, one of the important political and intellectual figures of nineteenth-century American history. During one of his periods in Washington, D.C., Anna met and later married a Pennsylvania scientist, Thomas Green Clemson. Subsequently, Anna and Thomas married, traveled through much of the American east, and became co-founders of Clemson University. Due to Anna’s copious correspondence, her papers have offered Dr. Ann Russell much material to create this fascinating study in nineteenth-century history.”
