My name is CPT LaToya Portee and I am the Army Health Care Consultant for New England. The Army is constantly searching for qualified professionals to serve in Medical Service Corps providing service to this country while caring for the Soldiers.

As an Environmental Engineer in the Army you would advise on or performs professional and scientific work utilizing engineering principles and practices to protect health and the environment. Duties include the assessment of existing and proposed weapons, equipment, clothing, training devices, and materiel systems. Activities relate to the design and formulation of recommendations to preserve and enhance health and environmental conditions including: air, water, noise, liquid and solid waste disposal, and institutional hygiene.

Your specialized skills as an Environmental Engineer will be highly valued by our Soldiers and their families. There are a plethora of leadership positions that you would fill by serving. Listed below are a few requirements needed to apply:

- Must be a US Citizen
- Less than 42 years of age
- At least a 3.0 GPA
- Possess a Bachelor’s degree from a school accredited by the ABET with a major in one of the following fields.

  (1) Environmental Engineering*
  (2) Civil Engineering*
  (3) Industrial Engineering
  (4) Chemical Engineering*
  (5) Safety Engineering
  (6) Environmental Health Engineering*
  (7) Geological Engineering

By choosing to be in the Army, you’ll be able to see and do extraordinary things. You’ll also discover a whole new circle of friends and professional contacts who share many of your standards and goals, a fact that makes it easy to forge lifelong friendships and professional connections that will help you throughout your career.

The Army recruits and trains professionals like you who understand the very serious responsibilities, as well as the exceptional benefits and privileges, of being in the Army. The decision to join the Army Medical Service Corps is an important one. But the experience is like no other, and the rewards are, without question, immeasurable.

Your first step in joining is to call or text me at (443) 694-9021 or via email at: latoya.d.portee.mil@mail.mil. I can answer any question that you may have. I’m available to provide you with a personal consultation and/or an appointment. I look forward to talking with you soon!
