Clemson University Center for China Studies will host the event in Lee Hall Auditorium on Thursday, October 16th, 6:00 PM – 8:00 PM. The program is open to the public and free to Clemson students, faculty and staff.

The U.S.-China relationship is one of the most important bilateral relationships for both countries as well as for the world in the 21st Century. This event is designed to give audiences an understanding of U.S.-China relations as well as the effect of China’s rise on our own communities, in a dialogue with two distinguished speakers.

JIMMY CARTER served as the 39th president of the United States. During his administration, his significant foreign policy accomplishments included the Camp David Accords, the peace treaty between Egypt and Israel, and the establishment of U.S. diplomatic relations with the People’s Republic of China. In 2002, President Carter was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize “for his decades of untiring effort to find solutions to international conflicts, to advance democracy and human rights, and to promote economic and social development.”

SCOTT LINCICOME, an international trade counsel with White & Case, has extensive experience in trade litigation in the World Trade Organization’s (WTO) Dispute Settlement Body, the United States, the European Union and other national jurisdictions. He advised corporate and sovereign clients on bilateral and regional trade agreements and U.S. trade policy, as well as WTO matters. Lincicome is an adjunct scholar with the Cato Institute in Washington, D.C., and he also taught at Duke University Law School.
