

Christopher J. Pollock

B.S. Chemistry, Clemson University, May 2009

Hi! My name is Chris Pollock and I'm a (right now the only!) Honors Ambassador emeritus. I graduated from Clemson in May of 2009 with a B.S. in the best science ever—chemistry, of course—and am now at Cornell up in chilly Ithaca, NY, in pursuit of my Ph.D. in inorganic chemistry. I absolutely loved Clemson and, during my four all-too-short years, I was involved in many aspects of campus and extracurricular life including being a two-time counselor for the EUREKA! Program, serving as president of the Student affiliate of the American Chemical Society, working on undergraduate research projects in chemistry and biochemistry both at Clemson and at other institutions, taking advantage of honors-funded study abroad opportunities, and, as you can likely guess, chatting up prospective students as an honors ambassador. I would go on and on here extolling the many facets that make being a Clemson Tiger so amazing, but I've spent enough words already. If you'd like to talk about anything Clemson or have any questions about campus/life/research/extracurriculars/opportunities/etc, definitely drop me an e-mail at cjp227@cornell.edu!
