

Ph.D. in Educational Leadership

College of
EDUCATION

Clemson University's Ph.D. in Educational Leadership is designed to prepare scholars, practitioners and leaders across and for P-20+ educational contexts by engaging in the breadth and depth of theoretical and practical knowledge related to leadership, ethics, equity, research and policy.

What is the Ph.D. program?

This program is an opportunity to engage issues in P-20 education in the areas of leadership, ethics, equity, research and policy. Through coursework and out-of-class engagement, we encourage theoretical and practical innovations in educational leadership. We offer two concentration areas: P-12 and Higher Education. Our P-12 area offers Building and District-Level Certification and an EDS en route.

Who is it for?

The program is for current P-12 teachers, school leaders, and higher education administrators seeking advanced education to continue in formal leadership and decision-making roles across P-12 and post-secondary contexts such as schools, districts, state-level organizations, community colleges, technical schools, four-year colleges and universities, and state/federal-level policy bodies.

What do students gain?

Students in the Ph.D. program develop rigorous inquiry skills to apply to contemporary education problems of practice, extensions of their scholarly and practitioner networks, and opportunities for publishing and presenting at regional and national conferences.
