EMPLOYMENT

2003- present Associate Professor of Psychology, Clemson University

1997 – 2003 Assistant Professor of Psychology, Clemson University

EDUCATION AND DEGREES

1997 Ph.D. Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois (1991 - 1997)

1991 M.S. Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois (1989 - 1991)

1989 B.A. University of Wisconsin - Madison (1984 - 1989), Honors Program

RESEARCH INTERESTS

My major research interest involves courage, cognitive processing and emotions. My students, colleagues and I are examining different typologies of courage, the interaction of subjective experience and courage, individual differences in courage, and deliberate strategies to increase courage.

TEACHING STYLE AND INTERESTS

I believe that instructors should design courses they would enjoy taking as students. Specifically, courses should enhance student learning, encourage application of the material, and should be taught fairly. My teaching style includes extensive use of in-class discussions and demonstrations, encouragement of student questions, application of students' knowledge and experience to course materials, and use of take-home essays, independent research, and informal oral presentations. Specific areas of interest include positive psychology, abnormal psychology, emotion theory, anxiety and mood disorders, sexual behavior and dysfunction, cognitive-behavioral therapy, individual differences, methodology, and scientific publishing.

TEACHING EXPERIENCE

- 2003- present Associate Professor, Clemson University Teaching Positive Psychology, Abnormal Psychology, Advanced Experimental Psychology, Personality, CHS honors seminar in Fear and Courage, Psychological Testing, Individual Differences (graduate), Courage and Emotion Research (as directed study and Creative Inquiry), and Peer Reviewing (as a directed study and Creative Inquiry).
