The Basics:
This is a 4-day program (3 days one week, and an ice cream social the following week), where kids will learn about the science of ice cream, create their own flavor at home, watch as it’s made in Clemson's ‘55 Exchange Microcreamery, and finally enjoy it once it’s shipped to your home!

Class Size:
Each camp session is limited to six groups. If you have more than one child that would like to attend, that’s great! Each registration is good for as many siblings as you’d like, no extra fees. If you have a social group or extended family that would like to book an entire session together, contact Frances at fschuer@clemson.edu.

Ingredients and Supplies:
We’ll be sending a list of ingredients and supplies you’ll need a week before your session begins. You won’t need an ice cream maker (but if you have one you’ll be able to use it), and we’ve curated our list of ingredients and supplies keeping in mind that grocery shopping at this time may be difficult.

Ages:
Our first session is designed for kids aged 6-11 and a parent or older sibling (15+ years old) to help out in the kitchen, and the second is designed for ages 12-16. If you have kids that span the age range, we recommend choosing the session that you think will keep your kids more engaged.

Location:
Since this program is hosted via Zoom, we can host kids anywhere in the country! Feel free to share this opportunity with friends and family outside of South Carolina.

Dates and Times:
This is a 4-day program (Monday–Wednesday plus an additional ice cream social the following Thursday). See below for the dates and times of each session. We will add more sessions if there is demand– email Frances at fschuer@clemson.edu if you’re interested but don’t see a date or time that works for you!
