Catie Clark (’16) has been accepted to present her research at the upcoming Center for Media and Celebrity Studies and the National Communication Association conferences. Alex Neal (’15) has joined Coveris, a global packaging company, as a marketing intern. Jerrica Ty Rowlett (’15) presented research and chaired a panel at the Popular Culture Association/American Culture Association Annual National Conference. Since then, she has entered the PhD in Communication program at Florida State University. Amanda Moore (’16) and Christoph Kresse (’15) presented research at the Clemson Graduate Research and Discovery Symposium. Meredith Morgoch (’15) presented her research at the Eastern States Communication Association conference. She and Alex Neal (’15) also presented research at the Washington DC Health Communication conference. Megan Stockhausen (’13) has taken a position in the Communications Department of the South Carolina Department of Consumer Affairs. Jacqueline Daloisio (’16), was asked to chair the panel “From The Locker Room to the Board Room” at Clemson featuring C.J. Spiller, Charlie Whitehurst, Dwayne Allen; Kris Benson, and Rodney Williams. Jessica Frampton (’15) has entered the PhD program in Communication at Ohio State University. Hanan al-Shadadi (’15) has been accepted to the Communication Studies PhD program at Ohio University.
MACTS students engage in coursework and research, but also internships, teaching, service, social outings, and professional activities in the business worlds and communities around them. Whether roller derby or presenting research at international conferences, MACTS students engage in the world to build rewarding lives and careers. It’s the spirit of the Clemson family.