Do you want to make a difference in the lives of students with disabilities? Have you considered working toward a degree in special education, but you have an undergraduate degree in something other than education? Have you considered a teaching career, but you don’t have the required teaching certificate? Consider enrolling in Clemson University’s Master of Arts in Teaching (MAT) degree in special education.

About the Program
Clemson MAT in special education classes are offered on the main campus, off campus at the University Center of Greenville in Greenville, South Carolina, and online. Field experiences are held in local school districts during the fall and spring semesters. The MAT requires 45 credit hours and full-time enrollment that you can complete (coursework and field experiences) in 14 months (summer, fall, spring and summer).

Program Advantages
• Program graduates meet the requirements to earn initial teaching licensure in special education-learning disabilities in elementary and secondary settings.
• For job-seeking Clemson graduates with an MAT in special education, 100 percent received job offers before graduation.
• Starting salary for a teacher with a master’s degree is almost $5,000 more than a teacher with a bachelor’s degree (in Upstate South Carolina school districts).
• Clemson graduates are highly trained and competent special education teachers.

Benefits of Earning a Master of Arts in Teaching from Clemson
- Become a teacher who inspires and leads in the classroom
- Learn from Clemson faculty who have a rich background in research, exploration and inquiry
- Become a highly sought-after graduate as you pursue a highly valued career

About the College of Education
Clemson University's College of Education offers “Best in Class” education with a history of award-winning teachers and leaders. The University has been ranked among the top-25 public universities in the nation for 10 straight years, and the College of Education is the highest-rated graduate school of education in South Carolina, according to U.S. News & World Report.

Apply Today!
To enter the MAT in Special Education program, you must have completed an undergraduate degree from an accredited institution. Visit clemson.edu/education/mat for more information on admission criteria or to start your application.