The timberland and its legacy

The Clemson Timberlands Legacy program is a way for landowners to use their valued timberlands to generate revenue to fund programs in support of Clemson. A gift to the Clemson Timberlands Legacy program goes far beyond a one-time commitment. It is a gift that will continue to provide benefits year after year, creating a legacy that reaches beyond your imagination.

Growing forestry experts

Clemson students are the future leaders in the forestry industry. Gifts of timberlands provide students and faculty with a living classroom for the study of wildlife management, forestry, water quality, wildlife and fisheries biology, and environmental and natural resources. Your timberland donation will provide financial as well as experiential advantages for our students.

Timberlands are one of our nation's most valuable resources. Timber is South Carolina's most valued agricultural crop, with a $17.4 billion annual economic impact. Clemson University has more than 75 years of expertise in forestry, forest management and natural resources, making us the ideal stewards for this program.

About the Clemson University Real Estate Foundation

The Clemson University Real Estate Foundation (CUREF) is a 501(c)(3) operating under its own independent board of directors. CUREF was established to advance the University through gifts of real estate and property and has expanded this to include revenue-generating property in the form of timberland. CUREF works with an advisory committee made up of forestry and natural resource professionals from across South Carolina. CUREF will make the decision to accept a gift of timberland based upon the recommendation from the advisory committee.
